Well, gee, I guess laws don't matter. Laws DO matter, but only to people who are Law ABIDING. CRIMINALS don't pay attention to laws. So, what's wrong with outlawing all guns and ammunition? Beside the fact it would do nothing to keep guns out of the hand of criminals, but would effectively disarm and render helpless any law abiding citizen? Afraid of something, Grendel. Afraid that the next 98lb woman you try to rape will pull a gun on you? That seems to be reason you want to disarm law abiding citizens. You don't seem to worry about criminals getting guns, but you're scared shitless at the idea of a law abiding citizen having a gun. Why is that? I seek answers. You seek confusion. You are the one that is confused, if you think that passing a law will have any effect on criminals (who, by definition, break laws). Jerry Kraus is a child with very limited thinking abilities, and no known personal responsibilities that he can call his own. He fears guns, and ownership of them, because they make a loud noise, and they are seen on his mom's TV, which she shuts off, because she want's him to do his HOMEWORK instead. jerry is a child- Hide quoted text - - Show quoted text - Actually, I'm not quite sure I'm the child here. I'm not the one who feels the need to arm myself to the teeth to protect myself. You simply feel that if you had a gun you would suddenly turn into a murderer.....a rather childish attitude.

There's one major difference between gun nuts and persons such as yourself - and that is that we, at least, don't tell you how to live. Actually, having lethal force at your disposal is definitely telling other people how to live. But, rather crudely. *And what exactly would that be?

You are precisely the reason I own military-pattern semi-auto rifles. Come get 'em when you grow a pair. Christ, I am SO impressed. And SO scared. You would be so easy to sneak up behind the mere thought bores me. Just give me a home address, and let's see how well YOU can protect yourself! Ha! You seem so fascinated with sneaking up on people. Is that how you approach women? Assuming you approach women at all, that is. He's the guy in bars who comes up behind a woman of interest and rubs her shoulders, but he's hammered, so he doesn't realize that the assault was unwelcome. Sort of like the way a certain world leader fondled the chancellor of Germany in front of cameras. Yeah I seriously doubt this goofball ever snuck up on anyone, or if he did got his ass kicked for trying. Regards, PLMerite

- Why don't they make Murder, and Attempted Murder against the law? So, in your alternate universe, Murder and Attempted Murder aren't against the Law? You see, laws are easier to enforce, if you don't make it easier to break them, by making killing machines

I've known people who ran into Female Grizzly Bears with their cubs in the outskirts on Banff. Nothing happened. Stop thinking in terms of killing anything and everything that you can't control. Isn't Banff the area where there have been a number of bear attacks and a few deaths over the last five years? Sorry, Jerry, old carrot, but I refuse to become a part of the food chain.

Well, gee, I guess laws don't matter. So, what's wrong with outlawing all guns and ammunition? Afraid of something, Grendel. I seek answers. You seek confusion. ===== At the recommendation of three game wardens in the Adirondack wilderness area of New York, I carry a handgun because I hike into places where feral dogs are an issue. What tool would you suggest I use in place of a gun? Talk to game wardens who aren't head cases. I've walked around a corner in Banff Alberta at three in the morning and come face-to-face with a full-grown bull moose, staring me tranquilly in the eyes, one foot away. Nothing happened. I've known people who ran into Female Grizzly Bears with their cubs in the outskirts on Banff. Nothing happened. Stop thinking in terms of killing anything and everything that you can't control. ===== Moose and bears are not dogs. Dogs are designed to behave differently, as all biologists will happily explain to you.- Hide quoted text -
- Show quoted text - Actually, I've dealt quite a bit with feral dogs, as well. Ever thought of throwing them a bone, genius? Is this too subtle for your game warden friends? Less fun than shooting them, perhaps? So we now get to carry a bone for the feral dogs, which will attract bears. So we also must carry pepper spray for the bears. What should we carry for the cougar? Backpack is getting a bit heavy, too. But then, Jerry, being a vegetable, isn't worried about the predation of bull moose packs.

Of course, I can't find a single example of an adult human being having been killed by feral dogs, after a brief search on the internet. My impression is that they are much less dangerous than many wild animals. Dogs instinctively like people, in my experience. Including feral dogs. Are you quite sure you're not being a little PARANOID? Along with your game warden friends, that is. Not that I'd ever suggest anyone in the U.S. government could ever be paranoid about anything. Just doesn't happen, in the United States. You're not trying very hard, Jerry. Whether feral or packs of house pets, dog attacks happen constantly in the US. In 2007 there were 32 fatalities in the US. <http://www.dogbitelaw.com/PAGES/statistics.html> After that google up: feral dog attacks

Jerry Kraus <jkraus_1...@yahoo.com wrote in message thus we find the true nature of your objection to guns. You consider that the only reason to have one would be a desire to kill. In short, you fear what you would do with a gun. A common failing among those opposed to guns. I will simply observe that your desires and feared inability to control yourself doesn't mean everyone else shares them.- Hide quoted text - The most dangerous people are the people who think they have no limitations. Adoft Hitler was in this category. As, apparently, are you. Don't forget that Adolf was also a non-smoking vegetarian teetotaler. He'd probably feel right at home in Berkeley or an Earth Day event.
